16 enter a fight to the death, their odds of survival dependent on their skills and grit (and a dice roll). Build your bracket and follow along as TouchTank asks: who among us will survive to the end of Dewey's Gamble?

In her hand she shook the dice and carelessly cast them over the small world below her. "The house always wins."

"Only one rule," she leered.

stammered.

"I don't - I don't know the rules," I

"House rule," she explained, laying 16 cards out facedown on the green felt— no, not felt— grass. My eyebrows jumped as I saw tiny faces staring up at me, pleading for mercy. Slack-jawed I looked back up at the face obscured by the darkness.

"Do you feel lucky?" Sarah asked, cracking her shadows of the back room, only her visor caught the light, sparkling like an emerald.

Similarly, in their exit interviews, alumni frequently cite time spent at tOAStER as a formative part of their graduate experience, using words such as "community," "learning," "outdoors," and "rager." Though we don't have a clue what 90% of our graduates end up doing for work, we do know that 100% pine for just one last retreat to Friday Harbor.

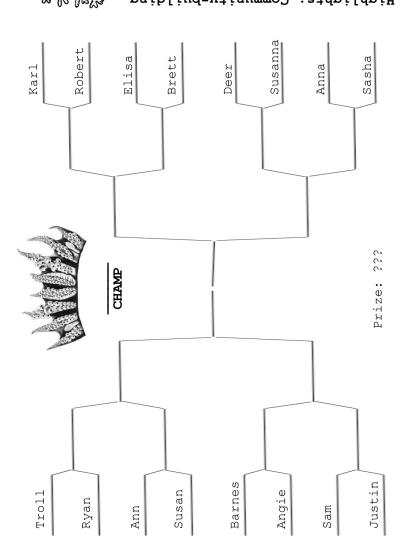

student body. Though not yet an official graduation requirement, Oceanography faculty have gone on the record stating they would "never, evvver [sic] consider passing a student who hadn't been in attendance at least once." In fact, there is a precedent of postponing General Exams and Thesis Defenses to allow for so-called redemption trips.

RANT: Where can I find the secret food spots of Friday Harbor?! Where's my $3 Banh Mi? :/

RAVE: The pun-levels of the Toaster emails were at an all time high this year. Good job, second year cohort!

RANT: Is it just me or is One Bus Away getting much worse?

RANT: Isa's talk is called "Nerd Rant: 3D Printers Are Cool". If she thinks they're so cool, it sounds more like a "Nerd Rave".

RANT: Aw, no cottages this year : (

RAVE: There was a new L pod orca born in the Puget Sound this month! They named it Lucky and it "looks healthy". Survival rates are 50-50 for orca babies, but I'm hoping for the best RAVE: We're gaining four minutes of daylight per day right now. Isn't that straight dope?!
